Fraud

Alex has considerable experience of defending fraudulent and exaggerated personal injury claims. Alex regularly advises and defends insurers in claims concerning staged, "LVI" RTAs and phantom passenger claims (often with significant credit hire claims) as well as accidents at work. Recent work includes:

- Appeared at trial in an employer's liability case where the Claimant alleged he had been hit in the back by a trolley pushed by a co-worker. There were no witnesses. The Claimant walked out of court during a forensic cross-examination of the inconsistencies in his evidence.
- Defended a Defective Premises Act claim where the Claimant alleged he fell through a bannister due to a defective railing. The Court did not accept the accident occurred as alleged.
- Successfully defended a road traffic accident personal injury claim on the basis of low velocity impact. There was no expert evidence but the Court accepted no injuries had been suffered.
- Appeared at trial for a cable company where the claimant alleged that she had tripped over a cable left by the company following cable television installation. The Court accepted that it was likely the cable in question had been left after an unsuccessful attempt to illegal splice cable television and the claim was dismissed.
